Photosynthesis converts light energy into chemical energy stored in glucose molecules.

Mitochondria produce most of the ATP that a eukaryotic cell uses to power its work.

The Krebs cycle oxidizes acetyl-CoA to carbon dioxide while capturing high-energy electrons.